"AID AND COMFORT." TO THE ENEMY. POLK'S PASS TO SANTA ANNA.

The Commander of our Naval forces in the Guif is hereby directed not to obstruct the passage of Gon. ANYONIA LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA and suite to Mexico should he desire to return thither.

JAMES K. POLK. May 15, 1846.

Polk's admission of having granted the pass, "When orders were issued to the Commander of our Naval forces in the Gulf, on the 15th day of May last, only two days after the existence of the war had been recognized by Congress, to place the coast of Mexico underblockade, he was directed not to obstruct the passage of Santa Annu to Mexico should he return.—Polk's Annual Message to Congress, Dec. 7, '46.

It remains to be seen whether his return may not yet prove favorable to a pacific adjustment of existing difficulties.—Ibid.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL CURE! PHILADELPHIA, April 9, 1846.
Last August a year, I caught a violent cold, in ouscquence of getting wet in a shower of rain.
t circumstance so common control. consequence of getting wet in a shower of rain. A circumstance so common gave me no immediate concern, supposing that I should soon get rid of it. On the contrary, however, I daily grew worse; a violent cough set in, then pain in my breast and between my shoulders. I now suffered great oppression from the great secretion of purulent matter in my lungs. I became greatly alarmed; and my friends considered my situation extremely critical, the more so as loss of appetite, hectic fever, and night sweats rendered me as weak as a child, and at night the sweat literally poured off mg! This was my condition when I commenced a child, and at night the sweat literally poured off me! This was my condition when I commenced using "Thomson's Compound Syrup of Tar and Wood Naphtha." I procured one bottle, and experienced so much benefit that I resolved to continue it. It is now six months since I ceased using the medicine, and the cure remains perfect. I firmly believe this medicine is far superior to every other remedy for Consumption of the Lungs. J. J. CHAMBERLAIN, No. 8, Carberry street.

For some moments, this afflicted foreigner remained clasping Miss Tox to his heart with an energy of action in remarkable opposition to his disconcerted face, while that poor lady trickled slowly down upon him the very last sprinklings of the watering pot, as if he were a delicate exotic (which indeed he was), and might be also expected to blow while the gentle rain descended. Mrs. Chick, at length recovering a sufficient presence of mind to interpose, commanded

And when, at length, Miss Tox opened her eyes, and gradually became restored to consuiousness, Mrs. Chick drew off, as from a criminal, and reversing the precedent of the murdered king of Denmark, regarded her more in anger than in sorrow.

"Lucretia!" said Mrs. Chick, "I will not attempt to disguise what I feel. My eyes are opened, all at once. I wouldn't have believed this if a saint had told it to me."

Not so the expatriated Native, amazed supporter of Miss Tox's swooning form, who, coming straight up stairs, with a polite inquiry touching Miss Tox's health (in exact pursuance of the Major's malicious instructions), had accidentally arrived in the very nick of time to catch the delicate burden in his arms, and to receive the contents of the little watering pot in his shoe; both of which circumstances, coupled with his consciousness of being closely watched by the wrathful Major, who had threatened the usual penalty in regard of every bone in his skin in case of failure, combined to render him a moving spectacle of mental and bodily distress.

have had that foreboding, Lucretia, when my confidence of many years is destroyed in an instant, when my eyes are opened all at once, and when I find you revealed in your true colors. Lucretia, I have been mistaken in you. It is better for us both that this subject should end here. I wish you well, and I shall ever wish you well. But, as an individual who desires to be true to herself in her own poor position, whatever that position may be, or may not be—and as the sister of my brother—and as the sister in-law of my brother—and as a connexion by marriage of my brother's wife smother—may I be permitted to add, as a Dombey?—I can wish you nothing else but good morning."

These words, delivered with cutting suative, tempered and chastened by a lofty air of moral rectitude, carried the speaker to the door. There she inclined her head in a ghostly and stutue-like manner, and so withdrew to her carriage, to seek comfort and consolation in the arms of Mr. Chick, her lord.

"How can I speak to you like that?" retorted Mrs. Chick, who, in default of having any particular argument to sustain herself upon, relied principally on such repetitions for her most withering effects. "Like that! You may well say like that indeed!"

Miss Tox sobbed pitifully.

"The interval before the Marriage.

"Dreadful things!" repeated Mrs. Chick.
"Dreadful things. Is it not a fact, Lucretia, that you have just now been unable to command your feelings even before me, whose eyes you had so completely closed?"

"I have made no complaint," sobbed Miss Tox. "I have said nothing. If I have been a little overpowered by your news, been a little overpowered by your news, and have ever had any lingering been a little overpowered by your news, Louisa, and have ever had any lingering thought that Mr. Dombey was inclined to be particular towards me, surely you will not condemn me."

"She is going to say," said Mrs. Chick, addressing herself to the whole of the furniture, in a comprehensive glance of resignation and appeal. "She is going to say—I know it—that I have encouraged her!" at louisa," sobbed Miss Tox, "nor do law is to complain. But in my own defence—"" "Yes," cried Mrs. Chick, looking round the room with a prophetic smile, "that is what she's going to say. I know it. You had better say it. Say it openly! Be open Lucretia Tox," said Mrs. Chick, with desperate sternness, "whatever you are."

"I have every had got the better of him at last, and was the premises in triumphant defiance—there was, at first, no other great change in the method of Florence's life. At night, when the workpeople went away, the house was dreary and deserted again, and Florence, listening to their voices echoing through the hall and staircase as they departed, pictured to herself the cheerful homes to which they were returning, and the children who were waiting for them, and was glad to think that they were merry and well pleased to go.

She welcomed back the evening silence as an old friend, but it came now with an altered face, and looked more kindly on her. Fresh hope was in it. The beautiful lady who had soothed and caressed her, in the very room in which her heart had been so wung, was a spirit of promise to her.

"In my own defence," faltered Miss Tox, and only in my defence against your unkind words, my dear Louisa, I would merely ask you if you haven't often favored such a fancy, and even said it might happen for a fancy, and even said it might happen, for anything we could tell?"

"There is a point," said Mrs. Chick, rismoved about her in the twilight and were
